To Whom it May Concern:

On October 10, 2015 I got a parking ticket for failing to move my car after 4 hours without a permit in Zone M, after receiving a warning on September 23, 2015. I moved to 2350 NW Savier St., into a condo owned by my grandfather, earlier in September.

Because the condo is owned by my grandfather, I do not have a formal lease, and all of the utilities are still in his name (at his request). This meant that the only proof of residence I could provide to get a parking permit was a credit card statement, which did not come with the right address until October 7, 2015.

When I got the warning notice on September 23, I called PBOT and explained that I couldn't show proof of residence for a parking permit yet, and they told me there was nothing I could do (I was not told about temporary permits until I called again, after the ticket was issued). While I tried to move my car as often as I could, I work and am not always able to move it when I should.

I now have the permit (a copy is enclosed as proof). I hope this helps explain why I was unable to get a permit until after this ticket was issued, and why I was unable to move my car. Thank you!

Sincerely,

Gina Scalpone
